HEKMAN FURNITURE

THE HEKMAN STORY

The Hekman story is the story of more than half century of dedication to the fine art of furniture-making.
From the very first, quality design and construction has been our prime consideration.
Hekman tables will last a lifetime of normal use, and products which bear the Hekman name are second to none in style, finish and design.
For over fifty years, first in Michigan and later in North Carolina as well, Hekman craftsmanship has typified the fine tradition of Grand Rapids furniture . . .
in all Hekman furniture, superb quality goes hand in hand with elegance.

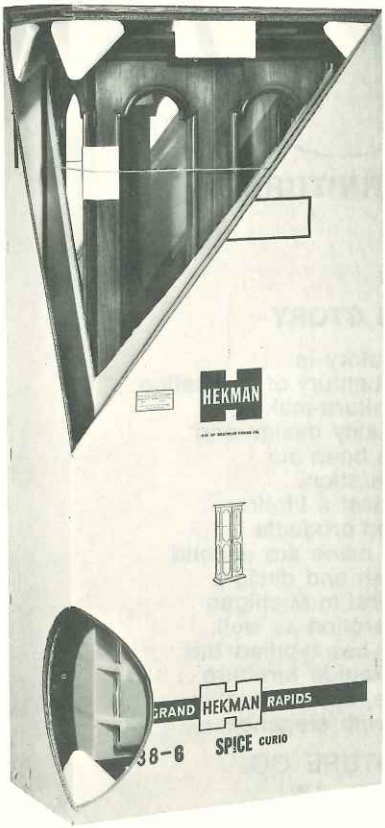
PACKAGING

A VALUABLE SERVICE OF REAL BENEFIT TO DEALER AND CONSUMER ALIKE



Every item in the Hekman line is shipped in a sturdy, dust-proof carton which more than meets shipping specifications, and which bears an illustration of the contents with item number and finish in quickly visible position on the front of the carton. The outstanding advantages of this unique manner of packaging are quite obvious:

1. Substantial savings in freight costs.
2. Easier warehouse stacking and handling.
3. Instant identification.
4. Better inventory control.
5. Reduces cleaning and finishing costs.
6. Factory to home delivery in the original carton reduces handling costs.
7. Delivery to the customer in a smart, decorative carton which suggests maximum care for furniture of unusually fine quality.

THE STORY OF YEWOOD AS USED IN THE HEKMAN YEWOOD COLLECTION

Taxus baccata; family Taxaceae. The yew is one of the very few conifers native to Great Britain, and has a wide range in other parts of Europe and a restricted one in North Africa. It also occurs in Asia, in Persia and along part of the Himalaya mountain ranges. As grown in Britain, it is generally a small to medium-sized tree, 25 to 65 ft. high and up to 15 ft. or more in girth in old trees. The bole is usually short and fluted or irregular in these stout-butted examples, and occasionally consists of two or more stems which, although originally distinct, gradually, as they expand, become grafted together. The leaves are spirally disposed on the twigs and maintain this arrangement on the leading shoots, but on the spreading side branches the leaf stalks become twisted so as to bring the leaves into two ranks along the sides of the twigs. The leaves are from ¾ to 1¼ in. long, very narrow and finish in a tough point. The male and female flowers are generally produced on separate trees, which accounts for the fact that one tree may bear large numbers of the pink-cupped fruits year after year while another never bears any. The leaves, twigs and seeds contain one or possibly more alkaloids which are poisonous to cattle. The sapwood of yew is almost white in colour and is generally about 1 in. thick, while the heartwood when freshly cut may vary from a bright tan to red-brown or purple. On exposure it becomes much more uniformly warm brown. The grain is rarely straight owing to the irregular growth of the tree and frequent inbarks are encountered in conversion. The loss in sawing up, therefore, is often very heavy, and merchants are not generally anxious to handle yew trees for this reason. It is, nevertheless, a beautiful wood of fine texture and works up to a glossy finish. It is heavy for a softwood, hard, strong and tough, and lasts for a long time in the ground without decaying. As most people are aware, in the Middle Ages it was considered one of the best woods for making bows for archers, and is still used to a very small extent for this purpose. Supplies from British sources were not sufficient for the bows required before the introduction of firearms and large numbers of bow staves were imported from Spain. Later yew was employed for chairs, small cabinets, panelling and small articles of furniture. Examples of old chairs, particularly of the wheel-back pattern, are still occasionally to be seen in antique collections. For some decades it was almost entirely ignored except for gate and fence posts, but more recently it has been in increased demand for turned ware, and occasional pieces of furniture have been made for people of discrimination. Burrs of yew are of comparatively rare occurrence, but when sound are suitable for conversion into sliced wood.

COUNTY KENT

Grand Rapids Collection

"County Kent" is Hekman's English collection with the Queen Ann influence, "the age of elegance." These designs date back to England when a change was desired from the heavy to the lighter and more comfortable furniture with a harmonious combination of straight and curved lines. Made of Honduras Mahogany wood and selected veneers in either a rich brown Dover finish or high gloss Kent, moderately distressed. Kent is also the county location of Grand Rapids, known for its leadership in quality and design of fine furniture.
